Connectred

Definition: the relationships among faculty, staff, and students that have characterized the University since its founding, symbolized by the University’s color red.

Moshe Paranov, Laura Johnson, Peter Breit, Jackie McLean, Ed Weinswig, Ceil Welna, Charles Canedy, DeLois Traynum Lindsey—these past and current faculty and staff members are among many who are central to the memories of thousands of University of Hartford students and alumni. For good reason: over the University's 52 years the devotion shown to our students—shared wisdom, shared learning, and shared guidance—has been the hallmark of a University of Hartford education. Lifelong relationships, pivotal influences, and, of course, essential knowledge all are forged and shared with students. These connections between faculty and staff and students are the most enduring central feature of the University experience.

This year's Annual Report focuses on some of those connections. I realize that these stories are only the beginning of relationships that will last and have impact far into the future. I hope that as you read these stories, you will see something of yourself and your experience here, and remember or recognize how important connections were, and continue to be, to the learning that goes on here. At their heart these connections involve teaching and learning, but they include so much more. These stories define the best of the human experience, something of which all of us at the University should be proud.
In my inaugural address, which I delivered over a decade ago after less than a year on this campus, I described this essential aspect of our educational mission as “Always Connect” (with apologies to my favorite British novelist, E. M. Forster). Connect with our community, connect with our world, and most of all, connect with each other.

Becoming and remaining connected are integral to the University of Hartford experience. Red and white, the school colors, are symbols of pride when worn or displayed by alumni, students, faculty, staff, and friends of the University. After reading this Annual Report, you will understand Connectred. I am confident that you will also see why I am so proud of the University of Hartford and why I believe in it even more strongly today. Thank you for your support of the University. Thank you for continuing to give.

Many people describe the University of Hartford as a family, and many students have followed in their parents’ footsteps and earned degrees here. The McGivneys, however, take the link between generations to a completely different level.

Ray McGivney, professor of mathematics and former dean of students, is celebrating his 40th anniversary at the University. All four of his children earned their bachelor’s degrees here, and his wife earned her master’s degree from the University.

“I felt at home from my first day on campus,” McGivney says. “I’ve had wonderful opportunities as an educator and an administrator, and I’ve always been encouraged to do interesting things.”

McGivney, who is also a former dean of faculty and department chair, won the Roy E. Larsen Award for Excellence in Teaching for his unique ability to bring a math classroom to life, and the Oscar and Shoshana Trachtenberg Award for Sustained Service to the University. In addition, for five summers he brought middle school students from six different school districts to campus for two-week, residential math camps.

McGivney’s 40-year career at the University has been so positive that two of his children decided to work here.

“We always felt like the University of Hartford was home when we were growing up,” says R. J. McGivney, dean of University programs, “and it’s great for us to be able to contribute to the University’s success in our own way.”

He has certainly done that. During his 12 years at the University, R.J. has helped to boost enrollment in the University’s summer and winter programs, launch innovative online courses, and develop a new program for adults who want to complete their undergraduate degrees. “I’m thrilled that I’ve been able to make such an impact on the University, and I really appreciate the opportunities I’ve been given,” he says.

His sister, Jean McGivney-Burelle, associate professor of mathematics, is also director of secondary mathematics education at the University. “In 2007 we partnered with the College of Education, Nursing and Health Professions to launch a wonderful new program that qualifies students to teach high school math as soon as they graduate,” McGivney-Burelle explains.

“This is a critical need in America today, and we’re thrilled that our students will be fully prepared to step into this important role. I’ve taught at other universities, and I’ve never found work that is more personally fulfilling and rewarding.”

“Our dad never told us we had to come here,” R.J. says, “but when we see how happy he has been for the last 40 years, it would be hard to imagine working anywhere else.”

In the Community

After completing her associate’s degree at Hillyer, Shiller went on to graduate summa cum laude from the University of Hartford with a bachelor’s in sociology. “We’re very proud of the relationships we form with our students,” says Melinda Miceli, associate professor of sociology at Hillyer, who also teaches gender studies at the University of Hartford. “Our classes are small, and we take the time to find out what motivates and inspires our students both inside and outside the classroom.”

“Melinda was a major influence on my life,” Shiller says. “I decided to major in sociology because I had such respect for her as a teacher. Her commitment to social justice for gays, lesbians, and other historically disadvantaged groups also showed me that it’s possible for everyone to make a difference in the world.”

While at the University, Shiller volunteered at My Sister’s Place, a Hartford shelter for women and children, many of whom were victims of domestic violence. She also spent the spring semester of her junior year in South Africa. “I was intrigued by the country’s history and by the race, ethnic, and gender issues its people were facing,” she explains. In addition to studying, Shiller volunteered at a home for children with HIV/AIDS. “It was an experience that changed my life forever,” she says.

After serving ten months in the Americorps National Civilian Community Corps, Shiller is currently pursuing the two great passions in her life: working as a counselor in a group home in Denver, Colo. while earning a master’s degree in sociology at the University of Denver’s Graduate School of Social Work. She received Hillyer’s Outstanding Young Alumnus Award in September 2009.

She’s not quite sure what’s next. “My current plan is to become a licensed social worker and open my own clinic, so I can continue helping people in the community,” she says. “I might even become a university professor somewhere down the road.”

Miceli is more certain about Shiller’s future. “Julie is one of the most extraordinary students I’ve ever known,” she says. “I can guarantee that she will make the world a better place, no matter what path she chooses.”
Around the Globe

The University of Hartford, originally founded as a university for Hartford, attracts an increasing number of students from around the world today. This year, students from 43 different nations are enrolled in the University’s graduate and undergraduate programs.

Clara Fang, assistant professor of civil, environmental, and biomedical engineering in the College of Engineering, Technology, and Architecture, is helping to open a new era of international collaboration for the University through an innovative alliance with Shandong Jiaotong University (SDJTU) in China.

“SDJTU is a large and very prestigious university, with a strong focus on engineering and a hunger for new approaches to teaching, so they were a natural fit for us,” Fang explains. “We’re also seeing tremendous expansion in China’s economy and infrastructure, and we want to give our students a chance to play a role in that growing market.”

Fang is currently creating a joint degree program between the two universities. “In the next few years, we expect that SDJTU students who have completed their freshman and sophomore years in China will spend their junior and senior years in Hartford, and receive degrees from both universities,” Fang says. “We’re also going to invite SDJTU faculty to Hartford to observe courses and work with our students. The two universities have very different approaches to education, and we feel each of us can learn a great deal from the other.”

The connection will move in both directions. “As the program unfolds, we’ll send University of Hartford students and faculty to China for seminars, classes, and real-world engineering projects,” Fang says. “This is an amazing opportunity to learn about China’s language and culture firsthand, and to help our students explore career opportunities they never would have considered otherwise.”

“You have wonderful opportunities to see the world and meet extraordinary people when you spend a lifetime as a musician,” says Nat Reeves, assistant professor of jazz double bass in the Jackie McLean Institute at The Hartt School. Reeves started playing bass when he was 16 and has performed in almost every corner of the globe with all the jazz legends of his generation.

For nearly 20 years Reeves and Steve Davis ’89, a highly acclaimed trombone player who is also a member of the Hartt faculty at the Jackie McLean Institute, have opened the performance world to their most promising students.

“We have several students every year who have both the talent and the desire to play at the next level,” Davis explains. “We give them a chance to play gigs with us on campus and in local clubs. We’ve even taken some of them on international tours, which give them a chance to connect with audiences they’d never reach on their own.”

Reeves adds, “Our primary goal is to help these students become better musicians, and one of the best ways to do that is by performing with other top musicians. We also teach them how to think and act like professionals, which may be even more critical to their success in the long run.”

Davis knows this firsthand. He was one of Reeves’s students who had this opportunity. “Nat and Jackie McLean gave me the chance to play with some amazing musicians from the time I was an undergraduate,” he says. “I’m thrilled that we can give a new generation of students the same chance.”

“We really love doing this,” Reeves says. “Students bring a lot of fresh ideas to their music, and that helps to keep us young and energized.”

This year, Reeves and Davis are playing with nine Hartt students including Jonathan Barber ’11. Like his fellow students, Barber is thrilled with the opportunities he’s been given. “I just turned 20, and I’ve already played with legendary performers,” says Barber. “Jazz has a long and rich history in America, and I’m truly proud to study here, perform here, and help carry on this great tradition.”

Ellen Carey has been making art for more than 30 years. “Human beings have a deep-seated need to be creative,” says Carey, associate professor of photography at the Hartford Art School (HAS). “I’m extremely fortunate because photography is a universal language, as is color, and I use both. Together they have broad appeal and connect with people.”

Carey is best known for her 1996 groundbreaking work, Pulls, in which scroll-like panels of pure form introduce and end with the parabola, a conical loop then new to the medium, and Carey’s signature. She uses the well-known, large-format Polaroid 20” x 24” camera in New York City, one of only five in the world. “I want to challenge everything people think they know about photography,” she says, “and get them to look at the medium in a completely new way.”

Carey’s work has been the subject of more than 44 one-person exhibitions since 1978, most recently in Paris, France, and has been included in several hundred group exhibitions, including one in China. Her work has also been shown in art museums, alternative spaces, and commercial galleries all over the world and is in the permanent collections of at least 20 prestigious museums, including the Metropolitan Museum of Art, Whitney Museum of American Art, Fogg Art Museum, Wadsworth Atheneum, Albright Knox, Museum of the Art Institute of Chicago, and the Los Angeles County Museum of Art.

“As I travel the world, I view myself as an international ambassador for the Hartford Art School,” Carey says. “This is truly a great place to teach and to learn, and I’m thrilled to share that message with prospective students and faculty members.” Carey has been a member of the HAS faculty since the early 1980s and says that teaching what she loves and knows best has been a tremendously satisfying experience.

“I’ve mentored more than 1,000 students, and I can see something special in each and every one of them,” she says. “There’s no question they struggle at times, like every artist does, myself included. But if they’re willing to work smart and work hard and stay true to their vision, we can help them find their own way to make a great life in the world of photography and art.”

In a Challenging Economy

“The University of Hartford has a wonderful entrepreneurial spirit,” says Susan Coleman, professor of finance in the Barney School of Business and a longtime member of the Governor’s Economic Council, which guides fiscal policy for the state of Connecticut. “We’re able to respond very quickly and very effectively when we see the world change in ways that will have a major impact on our students.”

The current economic downturn is a prime example. “Students face an amazingly challenging and increasingly complex financial environment,” says Mitch Weiss, adjunct faculty member in the Barney School with more than 30 years of leadership experience in the financial industry.

This fall, Coleman and Weiss launched the Center for Personal Financial Responsibility to give University of Hartford students the tools they need to enjoy successful careers and rewarding lives. It’s a critical undertaking. “All of our students, even incoming freshmen, are making financial decisions that will affect them for the rest of their lives,” Coleman says.

The new center offers seminars in financial literacy tailored to the specific needs of incoming freshmen, sophomores, and juniors who are choosing their majors, and graduating seniors.

Weiss also teaches a comprehensive, three-credit course on personal financial responsibility. “We cover everything from budgets and credit cards to understanding the economic impact of career choices,” says Weiss, whose own son and daughter are just beginning their careers.

Coleman and Weiss have ambitious plans for the future. “We’d like to see students who complete the course become ambassadors for the University, sharing their knowledge and experience with middle school and high school students in the Hartford area,” Coleman says.

“There are only a handful of colleges and universities in New England who offer a program like this,” Weiss adds. “We’re hoping the Center for Personal Financial Responsibility can be a model for the rest of the nation.”
Jay Waller didn’t set out to be a physical therapist. “I planned to be an orthopedic surgeon when I graduated from Yale in 1995,” he says, “but life has a way of changing even the best laid plans.

Waller was enjoying a vacation in Hawaii after graduation when he suffered a savage beating that left his face crushed and his brain damaged. It took him nearly two years to recover physically, but he didn’t realize that the effects of the traumatic brain injury would be with him for the rest of his life.

“I thought I had recovered completely,” Waller says, “but after seven years, I realized things just weren’t right. Even though I looked and sounded OK, I had trouble holding jobs and developing lasting relationships, and it was hard for me to persist and succeed at new things.”

Five years ago, and after much struggle and failure, Waller decided to visit a psychologist, who told him that his brain injury had never actually healed. “I was stunned at first,” he admits, “but I decided to return to rehab so I could become the person I was before the accident.”

After two years of intense therapy to restore his cognitive skills, Waller enrolled in the Doctor of Physical Therapy program at the University of Hartford in the summer of 2008. “I had some amazing physical therapists who helped me recover from my injuries, and I felt that those experiences would put me in a unique position to help others,” he says.

“At first I was worried that I had bitten off more than I could chew,” Waller confides, “but Catherine Certo [chair, Department of Physical Therapy] and all the professors in the department have been amazingly supportive. I’ve already made it through the first year of the program, which, I’m told is the toughest, and I’m confident that I can keep working hard and earn my degree.”

Waller, now 37, is philosophical about his life, in spite of everything he’s been through. “I realize now that this is where I was meant to be all along,” he says.

His inspiring story is featured in a documentary about traumatic brain injury survivors from across the nation, including Bob Woodruff from ABC News who was wounded while covering the war in Iraq. Filming is currently in progress, and the documentary is slated to premiere on public television stations in 2010. Watch a trailer at www.goingthedistance.info.
Blazing a Trail to Excellence

Jennifer Rizzotti has compiled an enviable record during her 10 years as head coach of the University of Hartford women’s basketball team. Under her leadership the Hawks have won four conference tournament championships, made four trips to the NCAA tournament, and been recognized as one of the nation’s top 25 colleges and universities for academic performance among NCAA Division I teams.

The results should come as no surprise, given Rizzotti’s background. She was named best player in the nation during an outstanding career as a point guard at the University of Connecticut and went on to play professional basketball for eight seasons.

“It’s easy for me to relate to and motivate players because I know exactly what they’re going through,” Rizzotti says. “I also know from experience that good things happen when you hold players to the highest standards on and off the court and expect excellence from them every day.”

Rizzotti is not just grooming outstanding players, she’s grooming future coaches. Tanika Price ’05 and Ikea Witt ’07, who both enjoyed outstanding careers with the Hawks themselves, are the first of Rizzotti’s former players to join the coaching staff.

“I was actually looking at law schools when a job on the coaching staff opened up,” recalls Price, who has been assistant coach for three years. “As it turns out, I really love the job, and I’d like to be an athletic director at a university some day.”
Witt, who was named director of basketball operations last year, always knew she wanted to coach. “This is a dream come true for me,” she says. “Getting a chance to be a part of a Division I program right out of college is almost unheard of, and Tanika and I are both really grateful for the opportunity.”

Witt and Price follow Rizzotti’s example off the court as well. “Coach Rizzotti is very involved in the community,” Price says. “She does a lot of great work for kids, and she’s one of the co-chairs of this year’s United Way campaign. She inspired me to teach young women in Africa how to play basketball, and she actively supports Ikea in her work with foster children in the Hartford area.”

“Both of these young women are very special to me,” Rizzotti admits. “Not only do they have tremendous basketball knowledge, they also have a wonderful ability to connect with players, coaches, and fans, and to help others in any way that they can. I see a lot of myself in them, and I hope they can enjoy the same success that I have.”
Josh Sibblies is taking three courses at the University of Hartford this semester: Calculus-Based Physics, Foundations of Programming, and Differential Equations. This wouldn’t be unusual for a first-year student, but Sibblies is a 16-year-old high school senior. He’s one of 360 students attending University High School of Science and Engineering, an award-winning magnet school on the University of Hartford campus.

“I’ve always had a gift for math and science, and I’ve always taken honors courses in high school,” says Sibblies, who spent six weeks in a special program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) this summer, followed by a week at NASA’s aerospace program.

“I’m really pleased that I can pursue my studies at the next level by taking college courses at the University of Hartford,” Sibblies says. “I’m doing very well in my classes, and I’ve already made friends on campus. I really feel comfortable in a college environment.”

Mako Haruta, associate professor of mathematics, is quick to confirm everything Sibblies says. “Josh is one of the brightest and most motivated students in my differential equations class,” she says. “He’s incredibly mature and has a wonderful personality. I truly believe he can achieve anything he sets his mind to.”

University High School of Science and Engineering, a public high school, was established in 2004 as a partnership between the University of Hartford and Hartford Public Schools. The high school was located in temporary quarters on the University’s Asylum Avenue campus for four years before moving into a stunning new building on the main campus this fall.

The “early college” model, which allows students to earn college credit while they attend high school, is the curricular foundation of University High School. In the class of 2008, 30 of the 70 class members had already earned college credit by the time they graduated. University High School was recently recognized as one of the top 50 magnet schools in the nation.

Sibblies will have 36 college credits when he graduates. “I’d eventually like to get a PhD in mechanical engineering and teach at MIT,” he says. “I’m already off to a great start, and I can’t wait until I can teach my own students about math and science.”

Thanks for all you do for the University.
The generosity of donors is one of the critical underpinnings of the University of Hartford’s financial stability. Gifts from alumni, faculty, staff, and the many friends of the University totaled $10.4 million last year. The University remains in solid financial standing, thanks to these gifts, the careful stewardship of the board of regents and our finance and administration staff, and adherence by all departments to tighter budgets.

Your gifts help us add scholarships, upgrade programs and majors, support faculty research and teaching, and accomplish many additional objectives. Please continue to give to the University. A postage-paid envelope is enclosed for your convenience.

We recognize that voluntary giving in the current economic recession may be more difficult. We know that your decision to make a gift is recognition that giving to the University is important. We are grateful for your support.

Over the summer a number of campus construction projects were completed. In Gengras Student Union the serving area was expanded into a spacious food court with new dining options—Bene Gourmet Pizza, Extreme Pita, and Einstein Bros. Bagels. On the first floor, space previously occupied by Taco Bell and Zia Juice is now a student snack shop and game room, and Taco Bell has moved to Konover Center. Also this fall, six new video screens were installed in Gengras, University Commons, and Konover Campus Center to improve access to campus news and activities. The University High School of Science and Engineering building and a new campus entrance off Mark Twain Drive also opened in September.
In April, President Walter Harrison (far left), Provost Lynn Pasquerella (second from right), and then-student Maria Qadri ’09 (far right) visited Michael Robinson’s classroom as a “prize patrol” to notify him that he would receive the first Belle K. Ribicoff Junior Faculty Prize, which includes a $10,000 award, at Commencement. Robinson, assistant professor of history in Hillyer College and a highly respected authority on exploration, published the critically acclaimed book, The Coldest Crucible: Arctic Exploration and American Culture, in 2006. The Ribicoff Prize, together with an endowed chair for junior faculty, recognizes outstanding faculty members who are not yet tenured. The award was established by a generous gift from Belle K. Ribicoff, a longtime supporter and life regent of the University.
The University of Hartford adopted a statement of shared values this year that sets a tone and a goal for the campus community. Participants in a sophomore leadership group (left), as well as first-year students and athletes, received T-shirts with the slogan “I am Committed to Community.”

The full values statement is as follows:
At the University of Hartford we are committed to community. We are an academic community that values integrity, curiosity, creativity, excellence, responsibility, and accomplishment. Enriched by our diversity and our engagement with one another, we take pride in our shared traditions and experiences. We are dedicated to building a culture that respects all of its members and celebrates their contributions as we work together to strengthen our community.

The University of Hartford is committed to community. We are an academic community that values integrity, curiosity, creativity, excellence, responsibility, and accomplishment. Enriched by our diversity and our engagement with one another, we take pride in our shared traditions and experiences. We are dedicated to building a culture that respects all of its members and celebrates their contributions as we work together to strengthen our community.
The University of Hartford is now one of only two schools in Connecticut that offers a professional degree program in architecture. In March the National Architectural Accrediting Board (NAAB) granted accreditation to the University’s Master of Architecture degree program. In the United States most state registration boards require a degree from an accredited professional degree program as a prerequisite for licensure. The NAAB accreditation ensures that graduates of the University’s master’s program in architecture will be able to sit for the licensing exam in architecture in every state in the country. The other Connecticut school that offers a professional degree program in architecture is Yale University.

40 University of Hartford
† Deceased
Scholarship donors and recipients enjoyed meeting and greeting each other in April at the eighth annual Scholarship Appreciation Luncheon, held in the 1877 Club Restaurant. Scholarship recipients Ariana Bass ’10 (second from left), an illustration major in the Hartford Art School, and Beau Deprey ’10 (far right), an architecture engineering technology major in the College of Engineering, Technology, and Architecture, were the student speakers at the event.
Roger Murtha ’60, ’61, M’62 (second from right), became the first person ever to be recognized for 45 years of service to the University during the Recognition Day event in May. Murtha, a professor of trumpet and chair of the woodwinds, brass, and percussion department at The Hartt School, was one of 140 faculty and staff members who were honored. Also shown, from left to right, are Sheldon Eisenberg, professor of mathematics in the College of Arts and Sciences, and Doreen Lay, director of registration and records in the Registrar’s Office, who each celebrated 40 years of service. The annual event pays tribute to employees with 5, 10, 15, 20, 25, 30, 35, 40—and now 45—years of service to the University of Hartford.
A robot (at top) built by the FIRST Robotics team at University High School of Science and Engineering broke through a ceremonial red ribbon as part of the program to dedicate the school’s new building in September. The $41.6 million, 85,000-square-foot building (above), featuring state-of-the-art laboratories and classrooms, is located on the University’s main campus on Mark Twain Drive. University High School, a public magnet school, was established in 2004 as a partnership between the University of Hartford and Hartford Public Schools. For five years it was housed in temporary quarters on the University’s Asylum Avenue campus. As an “early college”-model high school, students at University High School have the opportunity to take college courses. Nearly half of the graduates in the Class of 2009 earned college credits by attending and succeeding in University classes. One hundred percent of the school’s first two graduating classes went on to a college, university, or the military. (See Josh Sibblies’s story, page 14.)
Institutional Partnerships and Sponsored Research

The Office of Institutional Partnerships and Sponsored Research (IPSR) is the lead office on campus for the solicitation and management of funding from external institutions. This includes the submission, postaward management, and compliance for various types of funding (for example, grants, contracts, subcontracts, and cooperative agreements) from corporations and corporate foundations, private foundations, and public entities at the city, state, and federal levels. Our mission is to provide assistance to principal investigators in identifying, securing, and managing awards while ensuring that the University is in compliance with the requirements of the funder. Recognizing that external funding is critical to professional development, teaching and learning, and scholarly research, IPSR is committed to supporting faculty and staff in securing grants that further the mission of the University. To that end, IPSR also offers a series of workshops throughout the year to faculty and staff on topics such as researching funding opportunities, proposal development, budgeting, and postaward grant management.

Hongwei Jin (left), an associate professor of English at Shandong University of Finance (SUF) in China, was a visiting scholar at the University during the fall semester. In 2008 the University signed a “memorandum of understanding” with representatives of SUF to encourage an exchange of faculty and staff. While Jin was here, she observed classes across the University and researched teaching methodology so that she would be able to encourage creative learning and interactive teaching upon her return home. Her 11-year-old daughter, Hui Hui, attended the University and researched teaching methodology so that she would be able to encourage creative learning and interactive teaching upon her return home.

Founders’ Planned Giving Society

The Founders’ Planned Giving Society recognizes the thoughtfulness and generosity of individuals who have made charitable provisions for the University of Hartford in their wills, trusts, retirement plans, insurance policies, or life income arrangements of any kind. Life income gifts include charitable gift annuities and charitable remainder trusts, all of which allow donors to transfer valuable assets or property in exchange for a stream of income, typically for a lifetime. Upon termination of these arrangements, a distribution of the remaining principal is made to the University for a purpose designated in advance by the donor. Donors are often eligible for charitable income tax deductions in the year their gift plan is initiated.

Thoughtful gift planning offers each person, who so chooses, the opportunity to leave a legacy at the University of Hartford. Regardless of the method or the amount of these plans, we are deeply grateful to each member listed below, including those who have chosen to remain anonymous. The University maintains a helpful website for gift planning that you or your professional advisor may investigate discretely. The website (www.hartford.edu/plannedgiving) features donor testimonials, suggested bequest language, and legislative updates. Our gift calculator allows you to estimate deductions and determine rates of payment for certain types of gift planning arrangements under a variety of different circumstances.

If you have already planned a gift of this nature, we would much prefer to thank you now and recognize you for your generosity in advance! If you have not yet taken the relatively simple steps necessary to create an effective charitable gift plan, we hope you will want to follow the excellent example of the individuals named below. After consulting your own confidential advisor, please contact Peter H. Congleton, our director of planned giving, for more information, suggestions, and ideas for planning a meaningful gift.

Endowed Scholarship Funds

The University’s endowment provides the financial foundation on which its future depends. Endowment funds are established by gifts from University of Hartford alumni, parents, and friends to provide permanent support for scholarships, faculty development, academic programs, the library, and unrestricted purposes to respond to new challenges and opportunities.

Gifts to the University’s endowment are gifts that allow us to remember the name of your family member, friend, or favorite professor in perpetuity while benefitting students for many generations to come.

Ways to Give

There are many ways to give, and every dollar you give back or leave as a legacy will make a lasting difference to the future of the University and its students.

Cash
Cash payments to the University provide significant benefits for the University and immediate tax savings for you. Like all other forms of giving, gifts of cash are available for immediate use by the University or may be directed to benefit the University’s endowment. Checks should be made payable to the University of Hartford.

Gifts of Securities
Gifts of appreciated stock and mutual funds can be a wonderful alternative to cash. If you have owned the shares for more than one year, you get the double tax benefit of (1) a charitable deduction based on the fair market value of the securities and (2) the avoidance of capital gains taxes.

For more information or assistance in making a gift of securities, contact Crystal Waldo in the Advancement Services office at 860.768.2439.

Matching Gifts
Many businesses have programs that match the personal gifts made by employees, retirees, and family members to educational institutions. This is an easy way to enhance the impact of your gift. Information on your company’s matching gift program is usually available from your human resources department.

Bequests
You may make a bequest to the University by indicating either a specific amount or a percentage of your residual estate. If you already have a will, you can make a provision for the University by creating a codicil.

Life Income Gifts
Charitable gift annuities and remainder trusts are gift plans that provide you or another beneficiary with an income stream, often for life. You benefit with a current income tax deduction, a reliable source of income, and capital gains tax avoidance, and the University receives the principal in the end.

A Gift with Funds That Return to You or Pass to Your Loved Ones
You can make a gift of cash or other assets through an arrangement that will provide the University with annual gifts over a specified period and then pass the gift principal to your heirs. Alternatively, you can elect to have the gift principal returned to you. These gift plans are known as charitable lead trusts. They offer valuable tax savings that are especially effective in making gifts to grandchildren and other heirs.

IRAs and Qualified Retirement Plans
Your retirement plan is tax deferred, meaning that it will be taxed—as it is withdrawn during your lifetime, in your estate upon death, and in the hands of your heirs—sometimes by as much as 60 cents on the dollar. Designating the University as a beneficiary of your IRA, 403b, 401k, or Keogh plan can ensure that every penny will be used to ensure your legacy.

Life Insurance
You may own a life insurance policy that is no longer needed for the purpose for which it was originally purchased. Consider donating such a policy during your lifetime to support your favorite University program. Such a gift offers you income and estate tax savings. You may also consider naming the University as a beneficiary of an existing life insurance policy or purchase a new policy as a gift.

Real Estate
Real estate may be given to the University outright, used to fund a life income gift, or transferred to the University in a bargain sale, an arrangement that is part sale to you and part gift to the University. You may also contribute your home to the University and reserve the right to occupy it during your lifetime. Each plan can save you taxes.

Tangible Personal Property (gifts in kind)
Donating works of art and other noncash assets can be an effective way to support the University. Gifts in kind can be used by the University for educational purposes or sale, or to generate a source of income for the donor or the donor’s loved ones. Special rules apply for reporting gifts of certain property. The responsibility for an official appraisal rests with the donor.

Giving Online
The University’s secure online giving page is accessible 24 hours a day on our website at www.hartford.edu/giving. We encourage you to update your personal information when you submit your gift. A comprehensive section on planned giving, including information on gift vehicles and assets, may be found at www.hartford.edu/plannedgiving.
