The last two years have seen an unprecedented international turn in the curatorial programming of the Museum of Modern Art (New York), the Tate Modern (London), and the Metropolitan Museum of Art (New York), who have either created curatorial posts focused on the Middle East, South Asia, and Latin America or organized major exhibitions focused on art from those regions. Their efforts to internationalize their collections, exhibitions, and scholarship reflect the emergences of a disclosure of 'new globalisms' in the museum context that, while often taking into consideration their diverse political histories, neglects their modes and expressions of feminism. The task of this course will be to look at feminist art, activism, and curatorial practice in the non-West, in order to initiate a discourse on feminist art in the global context. This course fulfills the Modern/Contemporary distribution requirement for the Art History major and minor. Prerequisite(s): Any 200-level art course, or ART 100 with junior/senior standing, or AET 155 and AET 156, or permission of instructor. Visual resources fee.

This course is a historical survey of art in colonial North America and the United States up to the year 1860, with an emphasis on painting and sculpture. We will first investigate the intersection of European cultures and Native American traditions on the North American continent during the colonial period. We will then consider the period from the founding of the United States of America to the eve of the Civil War (1776-1860), determining the visual arts' role in the construction of American identity, politics, religion, ideology, and society. This course fulfills the Renaissance/Baroque/Enlightenment distribution requirement for the Art History major and minor. This course addresses the visual, historical, and theoretical concerns associated with the relationship between photography and Africa. Photography, which was present in Africa immediately after its invention, sparked new and complex images that built upon pre-existing traditions of representing Africans through drawings and prints. The first section of the class will examine how travelers, missionaries, colonialists, and the media have utilized documentary approaches to photographically represent Africans and African culture. By examining these approaches and their corresponding ideologies, students will trace the visual and intellectual landscapes upon which Western and African experiences have met. The second section of the course will focus on how Africans have used photography to represent themselves. Topics will include African leadership and governance, photo-journalism, and studio portrait photography. Finally, the third section of the class will examine fine art photography that is being produced by Africans working both on the continent and abroad. This course fulfills the Non-Western distribution requirement for the Art History major and minor. Prerequisite(s): Any 200-level art course, or ART 100 with junior/senior standing, or AET 155 and AET 156, or permission of instructor. (Visual resources fee).

Intensive study of specific topics in art history, changing by semester. This semester will focus on landscape in art. Unlike the categories of "nature," wilderness," or "ecology," the concept of 'landscape' seeks to mediate the relationship between the human and natural worlds. As such, landscape art has taken on many different forms and meanings across time and cultures. This seminar will explore the diverse ideas of landscape in art through discussions of specific themes, forms and styles, drawing on examples ranging from ancient to contemporary periods and across different visual traditions. Emphasis is on research, oral and written presentation of research, and participation in discussions. Students may take this course more than once, if the content does not involve repetition. This course fulfills the Topical distribution requirement for the Art History major and minor. Prerequisite(s): Minimum of three art history courses (9 credits) (AET 155 and AET 156 may count as one Art History course), or permission of the instructor. (Visual resources fee).

In this course, students will learn how to use digital video to tell a client's story. Students with knowledge of filming and editing will work with University of Hartford clients to create micro-documentaries (2-3 minute videos) that tell their story. Students will meet with clients to gain an understanding of what is needed, then they will meet with the instructor to storyboard/script the project. They will conduct interviews and collect B-roll before editing begins. This work not only helps the client, who needs digital media to both advertise and tell their departments story but it also adds to the student's body of work. The student will create a website that will house all of their work from this course and others so that upon graduation they can use it to share with their prospective employers. Times:TBA, Prerequisite:Professor approval.

Every game, from Tic-tac-toe to Connect Four to Chess, has a theory. We study the process of using ideas from the theory to inform the playing of the game. These ideas are sometimes strategies that can be tested either by playing in person, or by simulation using a computer program. We will use ideas from probability, graph theory, and combinatorics as we explore some simple games in depth and extrapolate to more complex games.

Do you get nervous in new social situations? Do you struggle to keep your hands and voice from shaking when you give class presentations? For some people, this anxiety is normal and manageable. For others, it can lead to panic attacks, avoidance of social situations, and even impact a person's ability to function. In this class, we will discuss the differences between introversion, shyness, and social anxiety. We will also discuss the purpose of anxiety and the physiology of the anxiety response. The influence of social media on social anxiety will be explored. Common interventions for overcoming social anxiety will also be discussed.

Love is quite possibly the most personal thing we experience - that desire for longing, acceptance and wholeness. Maybe because of love's personal nature, people have a tendency, possibly even a mandate, to talk about their experiences in love, at both the heights of fulfillment and the depths of despair. We see these "testimonies of love" all around in songs, poems, television shows, movies and social media. Through an exploration of popular culture, literature and film, this course will address the various ways in which we think about love and how we, in turn, attempt to find a language that can testify to the truth of our personal experiences with this universal phenomenon.

This seminar explores the complex, contentious relationship between what counts as art and what counts as obscenity in American arts and popular culture from post-WWII to the present day. We will examine the boundaries between art and obscenity, evolving definitions of the obscene, shifting legal frameworks for limiting or protecting speech, and the politics surrounding public expression. We will study diverse work from artists and writers such as Chris Ofili, W.H. Auden, Kara Walker, Robert Mapplethorpe, Yoko Ono, Andres Serrano, Nao Bustamante, and numerous others.

Over the past decade, we have been reminded again and again about the importance of black lives to our politics and to our national story. Indeed, we have learned that economics, justice, law enforcement, and art look very different when seen from a black perspective. In this course, we will try to take seriously that different perspective as we learn about black lives throughout American history. We will read autobiographies, watch documentaries and films, examine legal documents, and use these various texts to think about the matter (and significance) of black lives in the United States.

This course will examine how the popular genre of reality television creates, reflects, reproduces and challenges cultural roles and expectations about gender, race, class and sexuality. Reading and discussion will uncover the ways in which these "real lives" are manufactured and manipulated to fit pre-existing cultural narratives. Students will be asked to consider the sociological impact of reality television shows. We will also explore how the shows are made and the ways audiences consume them.

This course examines cultural challenges to Post-World War II American social organization and culture as a critique of modernism. The challenges by artists, political radicals on the left and right, drug takers, musicians, youth, and minorities serve to illustrate alternative visions of the next American Dream. Emergent oppositional reactions to the changes to dominate American culture are explored.

An average person can be expected to spend about 100,000 hours at work over his or her lifetime. For many of us, a job is not just a source of income but also an important part of our self-identity. It can be a source of satisfaction and pride as well as a cause of stress. In this seminar we will explore the world of work by reading book chapters and watching several films about the workplace.

The course is an explanation of the key principles of resilience for individual well-being. We all face challenges. The study of resilience is not just about navigating those challenges present for you right now, but also about mining the gold from the past to prepare you for the unpredictability of life. We will integrate wisdom teachings from inspirational change-makers about grit, failure, strength, optimism, courage and perseverance. We will investigate the power of storytelling, adopt a new approach to problem solving, collaborate in book clubs, and toolboxes that will support you on your journey.

Reality TV has become one of the most popular and successful genres of television shows. This course examines the commercial production of reality TV, ideas conveyed in the shows about such topics as beauty, sexuality, relationships, celebrity, competition, work, consumerism and success; and the representation of gender, race, economic class and sexual orientation in the shows. We will address how individuals and society may be influenced by reality TV. Do people take their cues from shows like The Apprentice, The Bachelor and Survivor about how to live their lives and relate to others, and how did we get from Kim Kardashina to President Trump? Students will critically examine content in a broad range of shows and create their own reality TV show.

Google has achieved consecrated (godlike) status withing the culture of search. Google amplifies a belief that everything that is important (relevant) is on the Web. Google shapes our beliefs and desire that all that is important to human beings can be achieved through information and communication networks. In that vein, Google has embarked on creating "a global and searchable universal libary" that will provide us with all relevant information and knowledge. Google benefits from and contributes to the western practice of building ideas as technologies. Google has become "the online Church of Google" that provides stability when everything seems to be in turmoil. And many of us have deep fatih in Google. This class is based on asking skeptical questions. Why is it so? How did we live before Google? Were we better off? Are we going to be able to live without Google? Are we going to be better off?

Every day we make countless choices, some which we later regret. Why did I buy that car? Why does my friend continue to date that person? Why didn't they sell that stock before it hit bottom? Decades of research in the psychology of decision making has helped us understand systematic biases in our thinking that impact the choices we all make. In this seminar we will learn about these biases and explore strategies to, in the words of behavioral economist Richard Thaler, "improve decisions about health, wealth, and happiness."

This course explores China's path from a traditional dynastic empire to a modern-day global power. What is China's identity (or identities) today and how did various forces--cultural, social, economic, and political--combine to shape these identities? Is China communist, traditional, modern, Eastern, Western, or some mixture of all of the above? Students will gain a better understanding of China's past and present by learning about the country's cultural context through readings, visual arts, film, language, and Chinese cuisine. This course counts toward the Diversity requirement for the UIS program.

What happens as literacy moves from page to screen? Several scholars, such as Sven Birkerts and Nicholas Carr, have declared this shift to be a crisis because the deep reading skills usually associated with print are imperiled. Or, as the title of Carr's seminal essay asks, "Is Google Making Us Stupid?" However, some thinkers, such as Nick Bilton, have used past parallels, such as Plato's fear of writing, to argue that this evolution should not be feared because it too will ultimately be beneficial. Bilton cites compelling research, such as one study of surgeons that found those who played video games are much better at laparoscopic surgery. Still others, such as Patricia Greenfield and Maryann Wolf, have warned against either/or arguments and instead sought to examine the best of both print-and screen-based literacy. This seminar will extend the analysis the professor has taught in HON 182 by the further reading of some authors (e.g. Birkerts, Carr, and Bilton) as well as adding the latest work of Maryanne Wolf on what she terms "biliteracy." This course will combine theoretical analysis based in English, Biology, History, and Psychology with practical applications, such as a few assignments of screen annotations and online discussions. Prerequisite: An overall GPA of 3.00 or higher. For A&S general education, this course can be counted as an English humanities course, and A&S English majors may take this course for elective credit. This course counts as an HON 300 seminar for A&S students; honors students in other colleges should consult with their honors coordinator before enrollment.

Complexity theory investigates "complex systems" which can be characterized as open systems of diverse interacting agents whose behavior is affected by memory or feedback, so that adaptive strategies are developed and emergent phenomena can be generated without any agent controlling the process. Among scientists the term "complexity science" is becoming familiar, and one can find exciting work taking place in mathematics and the sciences on such topics as fractals, chaos, butterfly effects, evolution and emergence, organizational management, strategy, and the like. In the arts, humanities, and social sciences, complexity theory is being used to better understand such phenomena as ethnic conflict, new genres of music or visual art or literature, economic crises, or current developments in theology. This seminar will afford students the opportunity to study the roots of complexity and its development as a body of inquiry and analysis, investigate the current state of complexity writings across a variety of disciplines, and explore its application in their chosen field. Students will have the opportunity to investigate applications in their chosen field. Prerequisite: An overall GPA of 3.00 or higher. For A&S general education, this course can be counted as an ECON social science course. This course also may be taken for elective credit in one of the following majors in Philosophy, Economics, or Politics and Government. The speed of technology has accelerated and intensified the interconnectedness of the world in ways that have transformed culture, politics, economics, business, and nearly every facet of human life. Indeed, no part of contemporary society remains untouched by this phenomenon of globalization. For instance, any smartphone user today currently has more information at his or her fingertips than a US President did a mere 20 years ago. The American economy is increasingly driven by the rhythms of global trade. Currently, many of our most important political, economic, and military challenges stem from our relationships with the peoples of Asia and the Muslim world. And American environmental and public health concerns are increasingly affected by conditions in other parts of the world, including Latin American and Africa. Globalization is a complex, multifaceted, multi- disciplinary, and at times amorphous process, that is at once difficult to grasp and absolutely necessary for navigating in our contemporary world. An overall GPA of 3.00 or higher. For A&S general education, this course can be counted as a POL social science course, and POL majors may take this course for elective credit. Gender has been generally theorized by relying (1) on the body and (2) as an expression of ways we think, feel and "perform" our gender. This seminar will consider both, exploring how the human body is gendered as well as how we live our gender through our reality and expressions. In this class, students will study femininities and masculinities as identities that are always and already lived through and shaped by other factors (race, class, etc.). To this end, course readings will emphasize memoir, autobiography, and fictional accounts of gender as lived and experienced in a world that is informed by one's race, class, and sex. In the fall semester, students will study gender as a lived experience by reading gender theory, watching films and collecting data from their day-to-day lives. Individually, students will produce their own gender memoirs and autobiographies in written, video, or other multimedia form as part of a semester-long project. These projects will be put together into larger pieces, such as a documentary or STN panel that will aim to start broader conversations about gender within our community. No previous media experience is needed to take the class or complete assignments, just an interest in the subject. The spring semester will be a series of lectures by faculty members and visiting speakers on the topic of "Trans(versing) Gender, Race and Class." Prerequisite: An overall GPA of 3.00 or higher. For A&S general education, this course can be counted as one of the following: an English humanities course, a SOC social science course, a GS course, or an AFS course. This course can also be taken for elective credit in one of the following majors/minors; English, SOC, CMM, AFS,GS, Digital Media and Journalism, or CIN (Group 4 category with permission of advisor). MUM 490: Special Topics in Arts Mgmt

Dates	CRN	Title	Credits	Days	Time	Location	Instructor(s)
09/04-12/14	42646	Special Topics in Arts Mgmt The Women in the Recording and Performing Arts course takes students on an in-depth examination of the personal and professional lives of women at all stages of recording and performing arts careers. Students will discover the stories of contemporary women artists and executives through the study of text, autobiographies, and current news and research articles. Students will learn about the motivational forces that propelled the course subjects to success and also about the societal forces that stood, and sometimes still stand, in their paths.	3.00	W	05:00-07:20	H 132	Staff
09/04-12/14	43746	Special Topics in Arts Mgmt In this course, students will learn about 20th and 21st century music business events and people through the use of documentary films. Students will watch entire movies (with some minor omissions due to time constraints or sensitive subjects) in class, then debate critical points discussed in the movie including key actors, surrounding events and go deeper into the importance of the topic. Students will gain an understanding of semianl events from recording to copyright to iconic live performances and other cultural events.	3.00	M	01:30-04:00	HH 106	Dede M
09/04-12/14	52183	Special Topics in Arts Mgmt The Ethics in the Music Business course affords an examination of the complex, real-world ethical problems associated with management and creative practices within the business. Through the study of historical and current case studies, students will debate the responsibilities of industry participants. Students will also broaden their abiltiy to recognize ethical dilemmas and analyze a range of possible solutions to address industry problems, especially in the absence of guiding (or binding) legal predecident.	3.00	W	09:30-12:00	HJG L132	Thomas M

Science Goes to the Movies will combine the viewing of recent and classic science fiction films with discussions and reflective writing about their underlying scientific merits. The course will help students better understand the connections between the entertainment industry and the sciences, as well as help students evaluate theatrical performances with a more discerning and critical eye.
