(Restricted to seniors)

Senior seminar on writing in the life sciences, culminating in a research project based upon the scientific literature. Students will create a review and critique of a contemporary topic of their choice in biology, using scholarly review articles as a model. Lectures and writing labs will cover essential aspects of science writing while progressing towards completion of the project. The course will also cover the importance of written communication, the role of creativity and imagination in scientific advancement from a historical perspective, popular science writing, and the modern basic research paper.

This course focuses on recent groundbreaking discoveries in neuroscience. We will devote our attention primarily to the interface of the nervous and immune systems in health and disease. This interdisciplinary area merges two very complex biological systems. New technologies fostered rapid developments in recent years, which in turn enables us to address long-standing questions and examine them in rigorous experiments. We will discuss work of pioneering laboratories, talk about their meaning in the broader context, and analyze approaches and methodologies employed in these studies. To create a solid platform of knowledge in both classical and novel techniques, we will discuss in parallel a textbook on methods. Pre-requisites: Graduate standing.

Video games have emerged as an integral part of global media culture, rivaling both Hollywood and the music industry in revenue and influence. This course will explore the cultural, political, and economic impacts of gaming. We will analyze the structure and rules of games, with a focus on the use of deaths and lives. In the game world, death can define a boundary, show an important rule, or be a marker of skill level. Some games make dying impossible or have different modes of play that treat death differently. Other games use time as an element that can be controlled by the player so that death can be erased over and over to create different outcomes. We will also explore how major world events have impacted the content of games and how they are played. Some of the questions we will seek to answer are: Why do we play games? What makes us repeat the same content over and over to reach an end goal? What do these games, as cultural artifacts, say about us? Class assignments will include: reading, playing assigned games, creative work, written responses, and essays.

This course will challenge students to explore the possibilities of filmmaking beyond traditional narrative styles. Screenings will include narrative, documentary, and experimental filmmakers who use film in unique ways to talk about social issues, internal and external conditions, and engage in a dialogue about the potential of film to create social change. Projects will engage different modes of making, with workshops and group critiques, building to independent final projects. (materials fee).

This course will explore the theory and practice of lighting for cinematic production in the studio and on location. We shall demonstrate advanced lighting techniques for digital video productions, using a variety of lab projects and location settings. Students will use lights, filters, light modifiers and post production techniques to enhance shot composition and camera movement. Topics include operating cinema cameras, using light meters, video scopes, false color and waveform monitors to set and refine your lighting and exposure. We will utilize all varieties of grip equipment to shape and transform the light we create in the studio or confront on location. Production and postproduction techniques are just as important, from selection of shooting formats such as raw, ProRes and other codes. File handling, exposure, color correction and color grading are an essential part of this process. (materials fee)

In this course, students examine media portrayals of history and how to produce their own video productions with a historical knowledge in today's world. Many people receive their understandings of the modern and ancient world from television shows like South Park, and documentaries on the History, and Discovery program services. More recent markets for this kind of work include commercials that use historical characters and story lines, and YouTube videos with historical themes, all which provide professional opportunities for media producers. The first part of the course explores historical examples of media like TV programs and films, examining the ways in which media content represents, remembers, imagines and finds meaning in the past. In the second part, students work on specific projects that will require the research, writing taping and editing of a short historical video production. (lab fee)

According to Edison Research Infinite Dial 19 statistics, more than half the US population listens to podcasts. In this class, students will come together and produce a series of podcasts throughout the semester. Each group will address a topic (to be agreed upon) and produce a podcast on a regular schedule using studio production facilities associated with this class. Discussion points around each group podcast will include format, length and target audience. There will be a strong writing component associated with this course. In addition, students will be expected to display a strong sense of teamwork. Students will also be expected to adhere to a strict production schedule throughout the semester. Podcast "shows" will be recorded and posted to Soundcloud. Early classes will feature a discussion and assignment associated with the growth of podcasting.

This course works independent of the classroom. The class will meet as a whole 2 times during the semester, otherwise, individual student filmmakers will meet with/email the instructor to set up their assignments. There are 4 mandatory assignments throughout the semester. Each assignment will be 2-3 minutes long. Student filmmakers will get their assignment, meet with the client(both on campus and public), plan their shoot per the clients ideas. They will then work with the client to film interviews, B-roll, edit and deliver the finished product to both the client and the instructor within the timeline. Each project has a 3-4 week timeline, depending on the project. There is a weekly mandatory email check-in (graded) with the instructor.

Students will cover the Hartford Wolf Pack of the American Hockey League (NY Rangers' top farm team) as "beat" reporters, throughout the semester. "Class time" will be spent in the classroom and at the XL Center in downtown Hartford, producing content (in the classroom) and covering Wolf Pack games (at the XL Center). Students will need to have complete flexibility in their schedules to cover and report on Wolf Pack games on both weekdays and/or weekends. Games start at 7 p.m. and reporting assignments will end at 10 p.m.- 10:30 p.m. Students will have to arrange for their own transportation to and from the XL Center. As beat reporters, you will produce multi-platform content that will be delivered online through WORDPRESS blogs that will be created by students. You will produce pre-game reports, in-game reports (often delivered on social media via Twitter), post-game stories, and podcasts. Whenever possible, you will be given the opportunity to cover the "morning skate" (based on scheduling and availability). Students will need to have an understanding and appreciation of the level of interest and understanding necessary to cover this particular sports beat "full-time".

Students will be introduced to the overall mechanics of the U.S. and world financial markets and the economic structure that sustains global trade and investment. It is from this basis that students will examine how journalists report on the capitalist systems that determine wealth and fortune and can also spell doom for governments as well as private business. This course will also cover the basic principles of journalism, but our focus is to apply those skills and tools to a greater understanding of how to use them in the reporting of markets, corporate mergers and everyday profit and loss. At the conclusion of the semester, students will be equipped to explain and analyze economic trends as a business reporter on multiple media platforms.

This course examines leadership dynamics from the micro to macro levels, from emergent leadership within small groups to historic exemplars of transformational leadership. It links leadership and change in five distinct contexts - organizational, community, political, social, and global. The course focuses on understanding how leadership communication and change operate not only in individual contexts but also across all contexts. The role of mass media and media (including social media) in leadership dynamics is one of the important topics that will be examined..

A primary purpose of art is to make those of us who engage with it think and feel, which means a lot of artists create work intended to challenge what audiences think they know about almost anything. In this course, we will examine art in various genres produced after WWII to the present day. We will examine issues around appropriation, consent, risk, economics, and truth by engaging with diverse work from artists and writers such as Chris Ofili, W.H. Auden, Kara Walker, Chris Burden, Yoko Ono, Andres Serrano, Nao Bustamante, and numerous others.

This first-year seminar will explore the world of humor: its physiology, psychology, social functions, and varied expressions. Humor is universal (we all laugh) as well as individual (what's funny to one person...). This intersection (sometimes collision) provides a lively place to analyze what people funny and why-and allows us to explore humor's many facets and uses.

Cosmopolitanism fuels much of contemporary music; just listen to and watch Beyonce's Lemonade, which we will do in this course. Cosmopolitan music and musicians promote a global sensibility through style and content. We will examine the explosive growth of EDM (electronic dance music) in the United States and how it has both influenced and been influenced by music from around the world. We will study Paul Simon's Graceland and its relationships to South African apartheid and analyze how Queen's "Bohemian Rhapsody" connects to Freddie Mercury's birth in Africa and adolescence in India. And, yes, there will be a bit of K-pop for good measure. What other course would assign that as homework? Prerequisite: An overall GPA of 3.0 or higher. This course counts as an HON 300 seminar for A&S students; honors students in other colleges should consult with their honors coordinator before enrollment.

Complex systems are all around us. They can be found in nature and in the activities and processes created by humans. In this course we'll explore two important characteristics of complex adaptive systems-networks and diversity-and the role they play in such systems. We will examine network structure and theoretical underpinnings. We'll use network analysis to consider how we engage in discourse and we'll examine the critical role diversity plays in complex adaptive systems. Prerequisite: An overall GPA of 3.00 or higher. For A&S general education, this course can be counted as an ECON social science course. This course also may be taken for elective credit in by majors in Economics. This course counts as an HON 300 seminar for A&S students; honors students in other colleges should consult with their honors coordinator before enrollment.

In this course, we will examine several works of speculative fiction across the Caribbean and the Americas. Speculative Fiction is a blurred genre that encompasses supernatural, fantastical, or futuristic elements. Speculative Fiction is any fiction where the laws of the world are different than ours, and a new world, and subsequently, a new reality is possible. Prerequisite: An overall GPA of 3.00 or higher. For A&S general education, this course can be counted as an English humanities course. This course also may be taken for elective credit in by majors in English. This course counts as a HON 300 seminar for A&S students; honors students in other colleges should consult with their honors coordinator before enrollment.

Gender has been generally theorized by relying (1) on the body (2) as an expression of ways we think feel and "perform" our gender. This seminar will consider both, exploring how the human body is gendered as well as how we live our gender through our reality and expressions. In this class, students will study femininities and masculinities as identities that are always and already lived through and shaped by other factors (race, class, etc). To this end, course readings will emphasize memoir, autobiography, and fictional accounts of gender as lived and experienced in a world that is informed by one's race, class, and sex. The spring semester will be a series of lectures by faculty members and visiting speakers on the topic of "Trans(versing) Gender, Race, and Class. Student cannot join HON 390 without special permission of Dr. Ealy. Prerequisite: An overall GPA of 3.0 or higher. This can be taken for elective credit in CMM or CIN.

An introduction to predictive modeling and modern machine learning in data science. The main topics for the course include: Data visualization and transformation, Linear regression, classification and logistic regression, unsupervised learning and k-means clustering, techniques for learning from data, assessing and comparing models, cross-validation, model selection and regularization, communicating with data. Emphasis is placed on statistical computing in a high-level language: R.

Immigration has seen a surge in media, political, and popular attention in recent years. It has been attributed to the rise of some right-wing political parties in Western Europe, is implicated in the complexity of the ongoing crisis in Syria, and has led to instability and political debate all over the globe, from the United States to Africa and to Asia. This class will give us the tools to understand the role of immigration in a global world and allow us to ask and answer critical questions including, to what extent can (and should) states control their borders, and how should states deal with migration due to different factors, including poverty, violence, war and environmental change? In addition to dealing with these thorny questions at the abstract level, we will delve into global case studies of immigration including the current debate in the United States at the Southern border, Rohingya Muslims from Myanmar in Southeast Asia, the crisis in South Sudan in Africa, and people fleeing the Syrian War in the Middle East. Through these case studies, we will question the response and responsibilities of both sending and receiving countries. Pre-requisite: One of the following - POL 110, POL 120, POL 130 or instructor approval.

This course introduces students to Scotland through its history, culture, and contributions to modern day society and focuses on what makes Scotland "Scotland". This course will allow students to actively learn the materials through both the traditional classroom setting and through experiential activities organized for the overseas component of the program such as walking tours, demonstrations, lessons, visits to cultural sites, et cetera. Topics include: the Gaelic language, bagpipes and the traditional Ceilidh, tartan as Scotland's "national identity," lowland versus highland culture, notable authors Sir Walter Scott and Robert Burns (Ode to a Haggis- the national dish) and other important historical figures/contributors to modern society, and Scotland's unification with England and current political climate/fight for independence.

Marine debris, the term for the litter that accumulates in global waterways, is a problem impacting wildlife, human health, water quality and the economy. While not a new problem, our reliance on disposable plastics means that debris accumulates at a stunning rate: about 20 million tons of plastic reach the ocean year year. In addition to the environmental impact, marine debris negatively affects industries including tourism and recreation, shipping and yachting, fisheries, aquaculture, and agriculture. Solving the problem should not simply entail cleaning up debris, but must also consider the way we see plastics and how we might innovate to re-use, recycle, or avoid using them. In this way, true problem solving requires input from the fields of business and environment. This course evaluates the problem from scientific and policy perspectives, and then challenges students to use social entrepreneurship in envisioning a solution to the problem. This course is an introduction to computational thinking that puts emphasis on problem solving. It is designed to help students develop competencies in reasoning using quantitative information. Students will learn and practice logical thinking game development and computer programming. Students will also apply basic mathematical concepts such as angles, patterns, proportionality, speed, and acceleration. This course is appropriate for students with little or no programming experience. Lab fee $50.
